Language: English Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from The Electric Light in Its Practical Application The following pages are intended to give the reader an account of what has been effected in the numerous endeavours to obtain a practicable system of electric lighting. But the details have been confined to those necessary to form judgment of the advantages of each system. Abstruse discussion has been carefully avoided, and questions have not been raised to which answer could not be found in previous practice. The labours of Du Moncel and Fontaine, the reports of Tyndall, Houston, Thomson, Deacon, Haywood, and others, have been freely utilized, the object having been to give both pro and contra. Much descriptive matter and numerous illustrations have been taken from my translation of Fontaine's Eclairage Electrique, now out of print; and considerable indebtedness must be acknowledged to other sources, named in the text. Where my own experience has led me to a conclusion, I have ventured to express it, but I have always also stated the reason for the deduction. There must necessarily be, in a technical work of this character, many imperfections. Recent and untried inventions, promising much, cannot be omitted from notice; nor, from want of knowledge of detail, can a probably correct opinion be held. Electric lighting is, indeed, so far within its period of infancy that, in many cases, suspense of judgment is compulsory. Nearly every week marks an important advance, proving the present incomplete state of this branch of engineering.
