As a result of the lessons learned from the Topps Meat company recall, FSIS now takes into account a broader, more complete range of evidence when evaluating whether to seek a recall or whether to take regulatory action. This gives the agency a credible approach to more rapidly taking action when certain types of evidence are available. In two recent cases, FSIS acted upon epidemiological evidence that linked illness to opened, FSIS-inspected product found in consumers freezers, where previously, we believed the agency needed a test result from an intact or unopened package be-cause of the possibility of cross-contamination. More than 1 million pounds of ground beef were recently recalled as a result of this change in our recall proce-dures. We are examining our training and staffing patterns to ensure that inspection program personnel and supervisors are doing their jobs correctly, that they...
