In the first case the danger zone of the antelope is discontinuous, in the second case the danger zone of the animal is continuous. For hunting purposes the danger zone of the animal hunted should be continuous. It is clear then, that the range MO must be less than 500 yds. if the danger zone of the antelope shall extend from M to O . The point blank range, so called, because the bullet was formerly supposed to travel in a straight line for a short distance, is a misnomer. Technically speaking, it implies a condition that cannot exist; but since the term is in common usage, we shall continue its use, but with the restrictions in the definition as given. The point blank range is that range within which the projectile does not rise above or fall below the object aimed at. Inasmuch as the danger zone of a given projectile is determined by the size of the vital zone, the point blank range of that projectile is that space within which the projectile must not rise above or fall below its limitations. That hunter who is able to set his sights to obtain the maximum point blank range within the limits of the game hunted will score the greatest number of hits, other conditions being equal. Problem 14B. Given, any projectile, say (.30-150-2700-C-.389) Width of vertical vital...
