This ebook is definitely not straightforward to start on looking at but really enjoyable to learn. It usually will not charge excessive. It is extremely difficult to leave it before concluding, once you begin to read the book.

GRIN Verlag GmbH. Paperback. Book Condition: New. Paperback. 12 pages. Dimensions: 10.0in. x 7.0in. x 0.0in. Essay from the year 2012 in the subject Law - Criminal process, Criminology, Law Enforcement, grade: B, Ottawa University, course: Penal Abolitionism, language: English, comment: 5 works cited , abstract: Governed by a retributive paradigm, the contemporary criminal justice system was designed in the image of a colonial institution from the past. Archaic, arbitrary, and racist among other things, this colonial legacy within politics and crime control has allowed governments to dictate the flow and actions of minority populations behind the veil of the system. Many scholars have identified this and are pushing for transformation and reform. Victims rights champion Robert Elias (1993) states that the movement can develop a more independent path that is freer from government dominance and control (p. 65). Ultimately, the state is rarely a first-party victim and should therefore be relegated to the background. The true parties affected in conflict deserve the control and authority to resolve the problem how they see fit. A preferred emerging model is the restorative justice process. Restorative justice is part of a larger social movement as it works in collaboration with Alternative Dispute Resolution models and proponents of conflict prevention resolutions. This restoration system is based on cooperative and constructive inputs from all parties involved in the conflict. This includes offender, victims, family members, spouses, members of the community and any other stakeholders. The community has the responsibility of overseeing specific conflict resolutions and ensuring all parties are served proper justice. There are many benefits with this type of system such as bringing back the conflict to where it occurred in the first place and solving it there with the key stakeholders as primary participants. This returns justice to where it belongs: in the community...
