For many people, the pursuit of his own interests seems to be the only reasonable life goals. But Singh told us, selfishness is not from the biological nature of man, but rather the product of history and culture. This narrow view of self-interest is not only unable to man to bring true happiness, it will make you lose a life goal. I do not know why they live. Conversely, if the macroscopic point of view to look at the individual interests, then you will be pleased to make a change, take the ethical life orientation. Looking out from this new macro-perspective, life is no longer boring, and will meet with the sense of belonging is full of self-realization. Life how to answer (the ethics of self-interest era) Peter Singer based on his rich philosophical, historical, ecological, scientific knowledge, through smooth text and a large number of instances, the philosophical theory and ethical thinking into approachable discourse....
